

Asepeyo Services File Complementary Provisions

Description of the provision

Through its Special Provisions Committee, Asepeyo may recognise provisions for facing unforeseen situations of special status or need that workers or their rightful claimants suffer as a consequence of an accident or occupational illness.

Complementary Provisions are optional in nature and are different from standard Social Security provisions.

Beneficiaries

Workers who have suffered an accident at work or occupational disease, or their dependants as far as to the second degree, and who meet the requirements for receiving benefits.

Provisions

- Aid for rehabilitation and recovery
 - Help with the costs of staying in a public health or residential centre
 - Costs connected to hospitalisation
 - Prosthesis and non-regulated technical help
 - Non-regulated medical treatment or therapies
- Professional reorientation and adaptation of work post
 - Vocational training and social-occupational integration courses
 - Adaptation of the premises where the self-employed worker works, as well as his/her work equipment
- Aid for adaptation of the essential resources in carrying out the basic activities of everyday life
 - Removal of obstacles in the habitual home
 - Acquisition of an adapted habitual home
 - Adaptation or acquisition of a vehicle
 - Home help for carrying out the basic activities of everyday life
 - Access to new information and communication technologies
- Other provisions
 - Complement to aid in the event of death
 - Training in care for people with severe disabilities
 - Maintenance of the possession or use of the habitual home

To remember

Various supplementary aids, or even the same aid more than once, may be granted should a new situation or need arise, provided that this situation has not been covered and the aids are covered.

These provisions are optional in nature, both in terms of their recognition and the amount, and no administrative or jurisdictional appeal may be lodged.

The Special Provisions Committee may determine the percentage of the costs of the cover to be defrayed, in light of the beneficiary's special status or need.

The existence of the special status or need must be duly proven. It must be unforeseen and have its direct cause in the work accident or occupational illness.

The invoices and/or documents that prove the costs incurred for these purposes must be provided.

Amount

The amount of the complementary provision will be determined, in each specific case, by the Special Provisions Committee.

Payment method

Once the Special Provisions Committee has approved the awarding of the provision, it will be paid by bank transfer. In all cases, the invoices proving the purpose of the complementary provision received must be submitted.

Cost

This provision is included in the Social Security contribution for work accident and occupational illness.

Application procedure

You should complete the application form available at Asepeyo care centres, and provide the economic documentation that accredits the earnings of the family unit, as well as the other documents that may be established for each type of provision.
